

UC DAVIS

CENTER FOR POVERTY RESEARCH

The generous support of individual and foundation donors leverages our core funding from the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services. Through non-partisan research, the Center investigates the relationship between labor markets and poverty, poverty among children and across generations, the relationship between immigration and poverty, and the changing social safety net. Our goal is to facilitate research using a diverse set of approaches across academic disciplines to answer critical questions about poverty and its solutions.

Support the Center for Poverty Research

Gifts to the Center for Poverty Research support current needs of the center, including enhancing public lectures and conferences, disseminating research findings, and creating special opportunities for undergraduate and graduate student engagement in research.
