

Social Inequalities in Health Care Treatment

Friday, April 12; 12:10-1:30pm
Andrews Conference Room, 2203 SS&H

JANET SHIM is an Associate Professor of Nursing and Sociology at the University of California, San Francisco. Dr. Shim's research interests include aging and life extension practices, racial, class, and gender inequalities in health, and the genetics of Alzheimer's disease. Her ongoing research includes a sociological examination of epidemiology, specifically how epidemiologists conceptualize and use race, socioeconomic status, and sex/gender in their work, and how lay people think about the effects of such social differences for their health. She received her Master in Public Policy at Harvard University and her PhD in Sociology at UCSF.

CENTER FOR
Poverty Research
Understanding poverty, shaping the future of poverty research poverty.ucdavis.edu