

UC Davis Summer Poverty Research Engagement Experience (UCD-SPREE)

The Center for Poverty Research (CPR) at UC Davis in collaboration with Howard University, Morehouse College and Spelman College, invite advanced undergraduates from these three institutions to apply to the UCD-SPREE program to introduce undergraduates to poverty research. Students majoring in economics, psychology, sociology and education are encouraged to apply to the program which will focus on developing skills leading to successful graduate school application and enrollment. UCD-SPREE participants will travel to UC Davis during their first summer in the program, where they will be paired with a faculty mentor and introduced to research at the CPR. Students will participate in CPR activities and coordinated graduate school preparation components sponsored by the Office of Graduate Studies. While at UC Davis students will stay in student dorms and be provided a student meal plan for approximately 8 weeks. Participants' travel to and from UC Davis is also covered and they will receive a $4,000 summer stipend. Following their summer research experience, students will participate in CPR conferences and events, either returning to UCD or by teleconference.

Students apply online and will be selected by faculty from their home institution, in conjunction with the directors of CPR. Four to eight applications from each HBCU will be forwarded to UCD's CPR for final selection and match with faculty mentors. A cohort of eight will be chosen from the three schools and 3-6 alternates will also be identified.
